If Chaos is a Ladder, America's Election Laws are an Elevator

Americans Don't Play by the Rules as Written and the Rules as Written Don't Make Any Sense

The Monday after the second Wednesday in December of presidential election years is set as the date on which the presidential electors meet and vote. In 2020, that meeting is on December 14.

On that day, electoral college delegations will meet separately in their respective states at their state capitols to cast their ballots for President and Vice President. The electors will then count the results and sign six certificates, known as Certificates of the Vote. Their Certificates of the Vote will then be paired with the Certificates of Ascertainment provided by the state governors. Then the packages will then be signed, sealed, and sent by registered mail to the President of the U.S. Senate (the Vice President). It's clear, straightforward, black-letter law.

But what happens if the rules aren't quite followed? What if the electors weren't properly appointed, don't meet on the right day, don't have a certificate from the governor, and forget to sign their names?

Americans Don't Play By the Rules as Written... In the last 250 years, there have been incredible irregularities in how the electors were appointed and how they cast their ballot. Specific accounts include:

The Georgia Incident of 1800, where the electors from Georgia failed to send a Certificate of the Vote and instead just signed their names to the back of the governor's Certificate of Ascertainment without stating exactly how they cast their vote. Nevertheless, all the George elector votes were counted.

The Massachusetts Incident of 1809, where the appointment of Massachusetts electors was disputed as “irregular and unconstitutional.” Nevertheless, all Massachusetts elector votes were counted.

The Indian Incident of 1817, where the Indiana electors were elected before Indiana joined the Union! Nevertheless, the votes of Indiana's three electors were counted.

The Missouri Incident of 1821, where Missouri sent electors even though Missouri was not a state of the Union! Nevertheless, the Missouri electoral votes were counted.

The Postmaster Incident of 1837, where the CN, NH, and NC electors were officers of the federal government in violation of the Constitutional prohibition against that. Nevertheless, all those electoral votes were counted.

The Michigan Incident of 1837, where Michigan sent electors even though Michigan wasn't a state of the Union! Nevertheless, the Michigan electoral votes were counted.

The Wisconsin Incident of 1857, where the entire House and Senate disputed the electoral votes of Wisconsin because the electors didn't cast their votes on the proper day. The President of the Senate counted Wisconsin's electoral votes anyway, over the objections of both Representatives and Senators! “Almost every Member of Congress who spoke on the subject agreed that the votes of Wisconsin should not have been counted.” Nevertheless, the votes were counted.

The Mississippi Incident of 1873, where the Mississippi electors did not certify that they voted by ballot, and one of the electors didn't have his appointment signed by the Governor of Mississippi as required by state law. Nevertheless, the Mississippi electoral votes were counted.

The Georgia Incident of 1873, where one of the Georgia electors failed to follow the constitutional requirement that he vote for at least one person who wasn't a resident of his own state. Nevertheless, the Georgia electoral votes were counted.

The Texas Incident of 1873, where the executive authority of Texas had failed to certify its electors were properly appointed; four electors who had been appointed were absent and replaced by other electors appointed by some of the remaining electors, without even a majority vote. Nevertheless, the Texas electoral votes were counted.

Did you spot the pattern? In each of the ten cases listed above, the presidential electors cast ballots that broke the rules. And in every case, the votes were counted. In America, presidential electors get their votes counted even when they...

didn't even send a certificate of the vote! (GA in 1800) represented territories that weren't even states! (IN in 1817, MO in 1821, MI in 1837)

weren't certified as properly appointed by their state governor! (TX and MS in 1873)

didn't cast their votes on the prescribed day! (WI in 1857)

didn't certify that they voted by ballot! (MS in 1873) were officers of the federal government (CN, NH, and NC in 1837)

were replacements for missing electors arbitrarily appointed by the remaining electors without even a majority vote! (TX in 1873)

didn't follow the requirement to vote for one person not resident of their own state! (GA in 1873)

So, with that history of hijinks laid out, let's imagine a hypothetical.

Imagine that Georgia's 16 Republican presidential electors decide to gather in Atlanta on December 14th to cast their vote for Trump. However, only half show up, the others backing out due to concerns of safety or refusal to act against the popular vote. The remaining 8 electors just pick 8 more trusty Trump Republicans to replace the missing electors (as happened in Texas in 1873). That takes an extra day, so they end up voting one day late (as happened in Wisconsin in 1857). They don't have a certificate from their state governor, so they send their vote without it (as happened in Texas and Mississippi in 1873). And off it goes to the President of the Senate.

Let's assume this happens in some other states, too, such that it's enough to change the outcome of the election if these votes are counted.

Now what? History, as we have shown, has a clear answer: Ten out of ten times, when electors broke the rules, the votes were still counted no matter how irregular they were. Always, every time. The rules didn't matter.

And Sometimes We Don't Even Know What the Rules Are! Our hypothetical is, of course, failing to mention a really important factor. While our roguish Republican electors are casting their ballot, the staid and certified Democrat electors are also meeting to cast their ballot. At the end of the day, two certificates get sent to the President of the Senate from Georgia.

Now it's January 6. The Senate and House of Representatives have assembled in a joint session at the Capitol, in the House chamber. The Vice President, Mike Pence, is presiding as President of the Senate. The Twelfth Amendment states: "[T]he President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted."

So Pence is to open all the certificates. But... there's two from Georgia!

As soon as Georgia's certificates are presented, the Democrats immediately clamor that the votes from the Republican electors have to be rejected - the Republican electors broke the rules. They weren't lawfully appointed, they didn't have signed certificates from the governor, and they voted on the wrong day.

But, as we've just seen, none of that has ever stopped electoral votes from being counted. Irregularities have been permitted many, many times in history. The Republicans have ample precedent to support that.

So what happens? No one knows.

I'm not exaggerating. Really, no one knows. The rules for properly counting electoral votes are so ambiguous, they make the original "white box" rules for Dungeons & Dragons look like Ikea instructions.

Let's explore a few possibilities

Maybe the President of the Senate Makes the Choice... There is a very strong Constitutional theory that the power to open and count the votes of the presidential electors is vested exclusively in the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate is actually the Vice President of the United States - Trump's running mate, Mike Pence.

Therefore, if this theory is true, Mike Pence can simply open the Republican certificates and toss the Democrat certificates into the trash. The Democrats could howl and shout and gnash their teeth, but they cannot count votes that Pence doesn't open.

I have laid out the legal arguments and historical precedent for Pence's power in my earlier article, so I won't repeat them here. Suffice to say, if opening and counting the votes of the presidential electors is like playing white box D&D, then Mike Pence is the designated dungeonmaster. And nobody gets to argue with the DM.

Or Maybe the Electoral Count Act Determines What Happens? Since the Constitution was a bit vague on whether the President of the Senate actually had total Dungeonmaster-like authority over the election, Congress decided to "clarify" the rules with the 1887 Electoral Count Act. I say "clarify" in scare quotes because it is the worst written legislation in the history of mankind.

The key clause, 3 USC 15: Counting Electoral Votes in Congress, consists of a single 809-word paragraph whose most important sentence is itself 275 words long. Click here to read it. Finished? If it made no sense to you, don't feel bad. It doesn't make sense to anyone. More than 130 years after it's written, legal experts still don't agree on what, exactly, 3 USC 15 is telling us.

Let's start with the role of the President of the Senate. The law states that "the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States."

Now that's interesting - the Electoral Count Act is making an allowance for the fact that the President of the Senate might open purported certificates. It then specifies rules for acting on those purported certificates (which we'll get into). But what happens if the President of the Senate doesn't even open a certificate? What if Pence just says, "this envelope is fraudulent and I'm not going to deign to open it," and just tosses the Democrat's certificate in a nearby trashcan? Well, the Act doesn't say - it says that the Congress shall act upon the certificates opened by the President of the Senate that purport to be certificates. Boom, we're back to the problem above... Awkward.

Let's assume that Mike Pence is warned by Democratic thugs that if he refuses to open all the certificates, he will be forced to dine alone with AOC. Horrified by this threat, a cowed Vice President opens both the Democrat and Republican certificates. Now what happens?

There's three situations that could occur...

Situation #1. If more than one certificate of votes is opened, but only one is compliant with the so-called "safe harbor," then the safe harbor return must be counted as the true return, assuming the votes have been "regularly given" by the electors. (Note: The "safe harbor" is defined in 3 USC 5, and says that "if final determination of any controversy concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State... shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors... such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day... such determination... shall be conclusive. This is why December 8 was the "safe harbor" for the December 14 elections.)

Situation #2. If two or more certificates of votes from a state can both claim the "safe harbor," then none of the certificates get counted unless both the House and Senate agree to count them.

Situation #3. If there are multiple certificates of votes from a state and none can claim the "safe harbor," then none of the certificates get counted unless both the House and Senate agree to count one of them.

That seems clear. Unfortunately, the very next sentence states "But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then the votes of the electors whose appointment has been certified by the executive of the state, under the seal thereof, shall be counted."

This is known as the "governor's tiebreaker." Because it comes at the end of an 807-word paragraph with a 275-word sentence, no one really knows whether the governor's tiebreaker is supposed to apply just to situation #3, or to situation #1 and situation #2 as well. The grammar is simply... ambiguous. One leading law professor, Stephen A. Siegel, claims it applies to all three situations. But Jack Maskell, the respected author of the Congressional Research Service report on the law, claims it only applies to the third situation. No Court has ever ruled on it. We literally don't know.

And even if we did know, that wouldn't begin to address the problems facing the Vice President, House, and Senate. What if there is disagreement as to what situation they are even in?

Imagine this hypothetical: Vice President Pence has opened two certificates from Georgia. One has arrived from the Democrats with a clean governor's certificate and one has arrived from the Republican electors with a few... irregularities. The Democrats in the House claim that since Georgia's Democratic electoral votes comply with the safe harbor and the Republican electoral votes do not, they must award the votes to Biden. However, Vice President Pence and the Senate Republicans claim that Georgia's Democratic electors don't qualify for the safe harbor because their votes weren't "regularly given" (due to fraud) and that they weren't cast according to "law so existing on said day" (because the state elections didn't follow the state law as written by the legislature).

The House votes for Georgia's Biden votes, the Senate votes for Georgia's Trump votes, and since they don't agree, the results get thrown out. If that happens in a few states, nobody will have enough votes in the Electoral College to win, and it'll get decided by a vote in Congress with one vote per state. If that happens, the Republicans win.

To prevent that from happening, the Democrats invoke the governor's tiebreaker! They say, "since we disagree, the governor's tiebreaker awards it to Georgia." We're in situation #3, so this seems to be conclusive. The Democrats cheer. Biden 2020!

Undeterred, the Senate plays its trump card (so as to speak). Cocaine Mitch rises, turtle-like, and declares the Electoral Count Act itself is unconstitutional and inapplicable.

Wait, what?

Yes, the Electoral Count Act Might Be Unconstitutional... As it turns out, there's a very strong argument that 3 USC 15 is unconstitutional. Invalid. Nonbinding. Not worth the hours you just spent trying to understand it.

Law professor Vasavan Kesavan has done the most thorough investigation of the Electoral Count Act yet made. In his seminal law review paper, Kesavan concludes:

The structural argument reveals that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional... As a prima facie matter, the Electoral Count Act, to the extent that it is a law that has legal force, clearly violates the anti-binding principle of rule-making. This is perhaps the strongest structural argument against the constitutionality of the Electoral Count Act. In addition, the Electoral Count Act is also unconstitutional in its potential operation in counting electoral votes. The bicameral procedure of 3 U.S.C. § 15 violates the anti-Senate principle of presidential election, the Chadha principle of law-making, and the anti-President principle of presidential election. Finally, to the extent that the joint convention rejects electoral votes contained in authentic electoral certificates as not "regularly given," the Electoral Count Act violates the anti-Congress principle of presidential election, the pro-states and pro-state legislatures principle of presidential election, and the pro-electors principle of presidential election.

It took Kasavan 124 pages to make his case, so I refer you to his article for a fuller explanation. It's very persuasive.

In Which Case the Presidential Succession Act Applies... So what happens if the Electoral Count Act doesn't apply, and the House and Senate can't even agree to disagree enough to have the situation resolved by a vote of the House and Senate?

Kasavan concludes that if things go really crazy, then the Twentieth Amendment will take over. The Twentieth Amendment states:

Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified Congress did, in fact, provide by law for this case. The law is the 1947 Presidential Succession Act, and it sets the line of succession for the President as Vice President, Speaker of the House, President Pro Tempore of the Senate, and then Secretary of State.

So if Congress can't settle on Trump or Biden, it goes to Pence. But if the election is disputed long enough to matter Vice President Pence's term will have expired along with Trump's term. Then the President would be Nancy Pelosi.

Unexpected, to say the least. But at last we have closure. A definitive answer as to who will lead our country if all else fails. Right?

Well, actually...

Except that Act Might Be Unconstitutional Too... Maybe During a September 2003 joint hearing Before the U.S. Senate's Committee on Rules and Administration and Committee on the Judiciary, M. Miller Baker said:

The 1947 Act is probably unconstitutional because it appears that the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate are not "Officers" eligible to act as President within the meaning of the Succession Clause. This is because in referring to an "Officer", the Succession Clause, taken in its context in Section 1 of Article II, probably refers to an "Officer of the United States", a term of art under the Constitution, rather than any officer, which would include legislative and state officers referred to in the Constitution (e.g., the reference to state militia officers found in Article I, Section 8). In the very next section of Article II, the President is empowered to "require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments" and to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, "Officers of the United States". These are the "Officers" to whom the Succession Clause probably refers. This contextual reading is confirmed by Madison's notes from the Constitutional Convention, which reveal that the Convention's Committee of Style, which had no authority to make substantive changes, substituted "Officer" in the Succession Clause in place of "Officer of the United States", probably because the Committee considered the full phrase redundant.

This line of reasoning has been thoroughly explored in a Stanford law review article entitled "Is the Presidential Succession Law Constitutional," which reaches the same conclusion.

So if the presidential line of succession is unconstitutional, what does that mean? Do we just skip the Speaker of the House and President pro tempore of the Senate and proceed to the Secretary of State? Does the Supreme Court decide? Does the Supreme Court send it back to Congress? But what if Congress can't agree? We could easily end up in a situation where Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo both claim to be the President!

Hopefully That's Cleared It All Up For You Our long and winding review of the situation has led us to the conclusion that the outcome of the 2020 Presidential election could be:

Biden, if Vice President Pence opens all the certificates, there is only one per state, and they are treated as within the safe harbors without objection;

Trump, if there are multiple certificates per state, and Vice President Pence unilaterally exercises his count-and-open authority to give preference to Republican certificates;

Biden, if there are multiple certificates per state, Vice President Pence opens all the certificates, and the governor's tiebreak applies because some are certified;

Trump, if there are multiple certificates per state, Vice President Pence opens all the certificates, the governor's tiebreak doesn't apply, and the dispute ends up getting voted on by Congress by state;

Pelosi, if the Vice President, House, and Senate end up in dispute from the above, and it doesn't get settled by January 20;

Pompeo, if the Vice President, House, and Senate end up in dispute from the above, and it doesn't get settled by January 20, and the Presidential Succession Act is deemed unconstitutional; or Anyone else... I haven't even exhausted all the possibilities.

Now, obviously, the most ordinary course of events is simply #1. Only the certified electors send certificates, Vice President Pence opens those certificates, no one objects, and that's that. This has happened in 75% of our Presidential elections.

But 75% is not 100%. The possibility remains that this one will be different. Even as we speak, electors may be gathering in Atlanta, Harrisburg, or other disputed states to cast rival slates of votes.

If so, then we're all going to take an elevator ride to chaos, and no one knows what will happen next.

Two really well thought out, researched and written posts. Well done and thank you for taking the time to write these out!

IMHO, there is no way that Mike Pence opens the certificate containing the slate of electors that were elected by fraudulent votes. Which eliminates numbers 1 and 3 from your list.

So I will add some more to make up for it.

Trump. Pence tosses the votes from the states with dual slates of electors and reduces the total required for a majority leaving Trump as the winner. Unknown. Pence tosses the votes from states with dual slates. With no one reaching the 270 mark, a House contingency election is held. If Republicans vote along party lines, Trump wins. If not, Biden wins. Pelosi. Each electoral college vote is challenged by a senator and Representative, tying up the process until 1/20, at which point Pelosi is made President. Once you get into the House contingency scenario, it can get really strange. Biden could win the Presidency with Pence elected VP. Or you could have a Trump/Biden result, Trump/Harris result. Pelosi could become president while the Senate votes Pence VP, and then in March Pence succeeds to the President position.

We truly are living in interesting times!!

TL; DR. But I'd point this out, since the governors of these swing states are guilty of the "relaxing" local election laws without legislatures' consent which directly resulted in massive frauds, why do they get to be the tiebreakers? If the two chambers can't reach to an agreement, those votes should be thrown out, and the governors to be blamed for the disenfranchisement of the voters in their states.

There is no "plan."

People are planning on showing up, and that's where the coordination ends.

Thus, there will be no "civil war."

There will be marching and sign-waving, and possibly some scuffles with Antifa and/or police.

What matters is what takes place inside the Joint Session on January 6.

It is all up to VP Pence.

We should all sing “The Battle Hymn of the Republic” and March in place as the Senate is deciding this. Can you imagine the sound of all our voices and vibrations from hundreds of thousands of feet marching outside will sound like to the Senators inside?! We need to terrify them by our fierce patriotism and desire for justice!!

They could put the lyrics up on big screens all around...it's a long song. The chorus goes “Glory, glory, hallelujah (3 times), His truth is marching on”

Essentials that should not be forgotten:

- Cold weather gear. Cold can kill as quick as anything. Don't skip leg layers and neck/face coverings.
- Gas mask / airtight eye coverings. If you can't see or breath you will retreat.
- Food / Water for several days. Armies march on their stomach.
- Handheld radio (uhf/vhf) to communicate if cells go down.

Here's a copy past of another of my comments:

The BTECH UV-5X3 is considered top notch. $65 on Amazon. And you'll definitely want to buy a new antenna for around $20. I also got the extended battery and a handheld mic set that can be clipped near my face on plate carrier rig, both $20 each.

Radio: https://www.amazon.com/gp/product/B01J2W4JUI/ref=ppx_yo_dt_b_asin_title_o01_s00?ie=UTF8&psc=1

Guide on antennas: https://www.miklor.com/COM/UV_Antennas.php

I got the NA701 and tri band NA320A. You'll want at least the NA701, huge upgrade over the antennas that come with handhelds. If you really wanna flex on the poors get the awesome 54" antenna for your handheld. It's hilariously loooong on a 4" handheld.

Or you can pickup cheaper models for $50ish that have less features.

The two way radios are a bit different than walkies. They'll allow you to select and transmit on any frequency rather than a locked in 10 or 20 channels. Longer range too. I'll find my comment about radios and reply again with all that info.

I can not believe that President Trump's plan to save the Republic involves sending a Million+ ordinary citizens into a civil war. Unorganized, untrained, many unfit. This is not his plan. Trump hasn't planned for over four years for this day, for THAT to be the plan.

I believe that between now and January 6th, it will become very clear that we are headed to an awesome Victory Rally/Party.

I feel confident that most of what has happened and is still happening, has been clandestine and covert. The professionals are taking care of this, securing our Democracy, while we posture and get amped up.

We will know soon enough, but one thing seems unlikely - that Trump's plan hinges on us, a humongous, angry, unpredictable, lynch-mob-in-the-making busting into the halls of Congress, and getting mowed down by Capitol Police in the process.

I just don't see that being the plan.

A small group of ruthless fuckers with military hardware (explosives, heavy equipment, mounted machine guns) would shock and awe the crowd into submission.

If they prepare and actually set up defensive positions, there's no way to win with civilian equipment unless people fearlessly run into the killbox in such numbers, climbing over mountains of gore, that they are able to overwhelm the positions.

I really don't think the unwashed masses would have that kind of conviction.

This is all assuming you can even get to DC locked and loaded, or at all, to set this up.

And let's say somehow it all succeeds... what happens after you've got all the members of Congress swinging from a rope? Freedom and victory for everyone? Lol, no. It'd just become the inciting event leading to a massive civil war, where other countries would probably get involved, and who knows what the US military itself would even do.

All I know is China would LOVE it if the US self-destructed like this.

I would hope he would exhaust whatever potential military solutions that are to this problem before relying on ordinary citizens to get slaughtered to protect his presidency which was stolen with four years of notice to protect the election.

He had four years notice.

Four years.

He was supposed to be our representative and the election was stolen. For him to then decide that it's up to ordinary citizens to fight and bleed and die to win what should've been protected in his four years is far fetched.

Love the user handle.

In a lot of ways, President Trump is Donnie Darko and all of us collectively are Frank the Rabbit.

Just like Donnie Darko was chuckling at the end with content knowing he was going to save the world, so is Donald Trump.

"Cellar door" is Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, and George Washington.

And Papa Smurf going around fucking everyone is the Deep State.

Trump rallies within easy driving distance of DC have pulled over 50k. On short notice. I think you've misplaced a zero at least.

We need to be aiming to beat the Lyndon B Johnson inauguration, which had over 1 million in attendance and was the previous high water mark for number of people on the Mall at one time.

I know you can't cope and deflect, the fight is about America, not one man, as great as he is, we need to take back control locally, despite being a keyboard warrior what are you doing IRL to help your country, I'm 47, busy as fuck with my company and still involved as much as possible when it comes to my city, the school my kids are going to and what teachers they have, I helped change the roof of our church, real stuff, not some whining on the internet. TDLR: I'm mad for only one reason, we guys, and I was guilty of it, decided to see our own dreams as reality, now it's time to get our country back, in the real world, not some kind of fantasy where we start a FUCKING CIVIL WAR, are you nuts or 12 ????

I think that big stage will also be used to broadcast a huge tv screen of all the voter fraud that cannot be denied. My guess is he is luring CNN and the others to watch his "I am King" rally and they will inadvertently be airing the indisputable voter fraud. Kind of like when Kaleighy showed the video of BLM saying "fuck the cops, what do we want? Dead cops". Everyone on all sides of the spectrum will be watching.

The rally isn't for the people. It's for the electors/senators/house.

It's out of the peoples hands at this point. Once the house/senate count, it's locked in.

He played the optics game to keep pressure on the house/senate. He's likely hoping the pressure stays up and they're teetering on the brink and seeing the amount of people would be enough to give courage to the senators/representatives to speak up.

Trump is banking on the Senate to side with him. That's the lynch pin. it'll fail the majority in the house. But it if wins the majority in the senate, it deadlocks. That's the goal. To convince the senate to majority side with rejecting the electors slated.

LUL? Um, no. Also, he doesn't have the power to do that.

DC has some of the highest crime rate in the country and the highest poverty rate.

Also, I would NOT advocate a bunch of untrained, undisciplined, and unfit civilians to bring FIREARMS to a protest. Real good way to end that protest when some faggot who doesn't understand what the safety is and how to keep their finger off the trigger negligent discharges a round into himself or someone in the crowd.

If you bring firearms into that protest in DC where it's a felony, you deserve every single thing that happens to you.

This isn't Call of Duty. You're not Solid Snake. Leave the soldiering to REAL SOLDIERS.

How about no? Instead of an irrational fear, it should just be "I have a problem with ____ because ____." There are perfectly normal reasons behind why people can rightfully disagree with each of those.

I don't know if I can take it anymore, I'm gonna just have to stay off the internet. I wanted to take that day off, but I got a newborn at home and the wifey can't be expected to raise our kids alone for 3+ days. So not only am I just getting crumbs, I can't even go there in person.

I'm guessing you don't have a wife or kids. There's not much heroic about being in a first wave and leaving the kids to be raised by some soyboy step-in. If it escalates, he has time to be part of the second wave in order to protect his family.

You know, I tried to write a response to some of these comments a few times tonight.

I don't understand why the concept of my family being the most important thing in my life is so hard to understand.

Trump's plan is over, it takes effect the 6th. Me being there wont change history.

We're not going there to fight, we're going to celebrate. Trump knows this, and honestly, I think everyone else does too.

This isn't a battle folks are going to, it's a party, a rally.

While I'm sad to not be there to see the proverbial bells of freedom ring, I live in a liberal area of Michigan.

I think it's FAR more likely my town will be rioted and looted than I believe a battle will occur in DC on the 6th.

But honestly, I don't believe anything will happen. LA will riot and burn, NYC will riot. Austin will riot. All the typical shit holes will riot.

My town will riot, just like they did before, but they probably wont be worse than last time.

BUT, if I'm wrong, I got 1 ounce sabots, 1000+ rounds of 10mm, and another 1000 rounds of .223 steel boys. If I see fire on the 6th, I'll employ my thrifty shopping as I load up my vehicle and take my family up north to safety.

So is mine but I also realize they have no future if we let this election be stolen. And I'm a middle-aged woman, not a strong, young man. I would have NEVER ALLOWED my husband to stay home and hold my hand instead of fighting for this country.

And what do you expect people to do? What exactly?

Keep in mind DC police, swat, military, operatives, undercover LEO etc have been preparing for weeks. Capitol police...all in probably the most well guarded and heavily guarded "city" in the country... or world?

So a bunch of complete strangers who have never met each other than on TDW, online message boards, twitter and nextdoor apps are supposed to... to what? siege the city? Just meet up for the first time EVER- literally not knowing each other from Adam and take on the entire capitol of DC? With absolutely zero logistics, infrastructure, organization, tactical plans or response? It's easy to encourage others to do such Wild things from your phone or computer and another thing to actually do it.

This is not the way to curtail or prevent an impending communist takeover of America. It's just not. And that doesn't make anyone a coward who thinks so.

If/ when it comes to that then there needs to be much better planning and organizing, leadership etc rather randomly going to DC based off a possible misconstrued tweet where women and children could very well be present.

Are you insinuating that you encourage al these "young men" to tell their employers they are quitting their jobs? Because who knows when they'll be back right? Do you just rent a hotel when you're attempting to do such things? Go shower up and change clothes then come back down to continue on?

No that's not what I'm saying. I'm saying if those who truly think they're "going to war" or "to start a revolution" how exactly do they plan to return to work? And when?

"Yeah boss idk exactly when I'll be back. Depends on how long the fighting takes".

You think these hotels are just gonna be cool with people renting their rooms while mass chaos and violence is occurring outside? Really?

You're an embarrassment.

You're literally reading what you WANT to read. Because you want to play grown up army man. You're the first to scream in terror and get cut the fuck down in an actual firefight. You're a danger to everyone around you. Do the right thing. Leave your firearms at home. Put your little wet dream away. It's not going to happen.

Don't think of yourself as "not going" instead you are rearguard and/or reserves... We'll have not just a show of force but also some reserves as well... this works out for the best. After all... the enemy tried to rig the election based on "knowing" about 75% of our numbers... that 25% out of nowhere screwed them over... We're just going to do that again. Don't forget... our numbers have further increased after the election since people began to see the fuckery plain as day...

Perhaps that's the pitch to those who may want to go to DC but don't quite have the stomach for the initial risk: Head to the outer and meet up with other likeminded people and see what plays out at the epicentre. No doubt if reserves are needed for a second wave of protests, some of those would flee - but others would be galvanised to action.

In any case, this is looking to be more of a celebration than a protest

My big concern is having so many eggs in one basket. If things get violent in DC that's a lot of patriots packed together that could be wiped out by deep state actors. It might not get violent but I don't see any point in even being there if we're not going to be violent. We've done the peaceful shit twice in DC already, doing it again serves no point.

I'm of a similar mind. There's not much point in protesting, and even going to D.C. armed for a show of force is somewhat pointless without a tangible objective and the will to act. If Trump wants people to show up to D.C. armed, then he needs to be willing to cross the Rubicon, but at this point his plan is unclear.

No. None of you are military. This isn't a militia. None of us are fit or trained as an actual force. Yes, some of us have been in the military so we know what the deal is, but as a force? Absolutely not. There are no reserves. There is no rearguard. We are not militant. The biggest threat our 'army' would be against ourselves.

This isn't a takeover. And running your fucking trap about it on a website that's viewable by everyone is a real quick way to get Trump/Trumpism/nationalism/america first movement added to the domestic terrorist list.

And don't bother with 'we're rolling in there armed to protect the protestors'. You'd be the biggest threat to protestors.

Leave soldiering to the real soldiers.

Look at what "normal" is... accepting people mutilating their crotches, eating drugs and playing dress up to pretend to be something that they are not... Being told what to think... Having your rights and dignity slowly stripped away from you...

Fuck that and people like the moron you replied to... with a rake.

Let me pick your delusion apart...

None of you are military. There's a significant number of active, reserve, and retired military within our ranks.

None of us are fit or trained as an actual force. So were the original revolutionaries... They were farmers, shopkeepers, lawyers and more... Your point?

We are not militant. Just because we have so far refused to remove the safeties and gone "weapons free" does not mean that we are not militant.

The biggest threat our 'army' would be against ourselves. No, the biggest threat is subversive slime like you poisoning our morale out of ignorance and fear, outright sabotaging us, or leaking our comms to the enemy..

running your fucking trap about it on a website that's viewable by everyone is a real quick way to get Trump/Trumpism/nationalism/America first movement added to the domestic terrorist list. Proving your ignorance I see... They've ALREADY declared patriotism as a "national security threat" many years ago... The only thing stopping them from formally declaring the America First movement as "domestic terrorism" is the fact that doing so lights the fuse and kicks things off. After all declaring that people who care about the country as the enemy would shatter the mask of lies that they wear.

You'd be the biggest threat to protestors. Ah, so you're defending Pantifa... After all you'd like to see innocent people being harmed judging by your very words in the post I'm bothering to reply to just so your smug ass can think that you're "on the right side of history."...

Leave soldiering to the real soldiers. So leave it to people whose boot scrapings are worth more than you... Got it...

At 10am when Congress starts their joint session, it would be most wonderful for Air Force One to fly over the building minimum distance safety requires.

Any aircraft with the President onboard is Air Force One, so maybe one of the dual seat F15 aircraft can be AF1 that day. Above Mach one please?

So here's the tough conversation for me. Sole provider, clear cross the country, and 3 kids. Wife has 0 interest in me joining. Do I bounce for the weekend and fly in for support? Could drive, but that's even longer away and risking traveling with weapons. Anyone joining me would be in the exact situation.

I have a "if not now, when?" response but also a natural provider instinct that says no. Those in similar conflicting positions, how have you been wrestling with this?

– Mypronounistrump 5 points 23 hours ago +6 / -1

Very similar situation. Wife isn't in love with TRUMP, but is starting to understand that if we all do nothing, communists will take over. It's easier to get involved right now than it will be after the communists have already completely taken over. She is starting to understand the stakes and what our country would look like for our young kids should we lose this war.

Is me being there and taking off work, taking time away from the family, going to save the republic? No. But imagine if even just 1-2% answered our president's call to be there, and the other 98-99% did something, anything at all remotely supportive of the president this next month (is, not just being completely silent and sitting on our butt). What a game changer that would be.

For example, I just had a conversation last night for the first time with a family member who is a flaming liberal who gets all their information from MSM. Was civil. I heard him out, but I gave lots of specific information about my viewpoint and worldview. At the end of it, did not convince him obviously, but he said I gave him a lot to think about because obviously, I mentioned many things MSM doesn't cover. Not just that, but 2-4 other family members who are just as conservative as me (but not as willing to talk about politics) listened. You never know, we can have a positive influence and plant seeds in not just the people we disagree with, but also positively influence like-minded people around us. Point is, my view is if every single 80+ million Trump supporters did something, anything, to help this fight against Marxism, things would in general look a lot different. I might just be preaching to the choir here, but just wanted to give my 2 cents.,

100% Not a shill, and I know this is a new account so if I'm deported, whatever.

I see a lot of people saying that "information to follow" means he's going to dump information about election fraud evidence, and that could be what he means, but I don't think it is. I think he's saying more information about what he's asking of us on the 6th. Could def be wrong. I just don't want people to take this as a promise of anything like that. We don't know exactly what is meant by that. But God damn if it's solid evidence or his declaration of action, I would want nothing more.
